ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

The editor's first debt of gratitude is to the Bristol Record Society for the confidence shown by them in supporting this reprint of a Poll Book and his second is to Professor Peter Malpass of the Society, who has acted as "Guide, Philosopher and Friend" and given unsparingly of his time and wisdom throughout. The General Editor Professor Jonathan Barry has been most supportive and helpful. Professor Roger Leech put the editor in touch with Miss Penny Copeland, who drew the sketch maps. The staff at the Bristol Archive (formerly the Bristol Record Office) and the Bristol Central Reference Library have dealt promptly and efficiently with requests for help and information; special thanks go to Ms Dawn Dyer of the Central Library, who has frequently gone well beyond the call of duty and has done so with unfailing cheerfulness. Dr Peter Newley of the Bristol and Avon Family History Society has capably and patiently fielded a number of family history enquiries. Assistance and information regarding particular aspects have been most kindly given by Miss Mimi Avery of Avery's, Mrs Carla Contractor, Dr Madge Dresser, Mrs Gill Hogarth of the Clifton Diocesan Archive, the staff at the Law Society's Library in Chancery Lane, Mr Bob Lawrence, Mr W. John Lyes, Mr David Martyn of the Kings Weston Action Group and Dr Philip Salmon of the History of Parliament Trust. Dr Martin Crossley Evans, Mr William Evans and Miss Anne Morse Thomas helped in numerous ways; notably, Dr Crossley Evans read a draft of Appendix 4 and loaned the editor Rose's Political History of Bristol from his personal collection; Mr Evans read drafts of the Introduction and Appendices and Miss Thomas read a draft of the Introduction. All three provided valuable information and suggestions, nearly all of which have been incorporated, and saved the editor from a number of unfortunate errors. Any which remain are his own.

Notes:

1. The foundation of the Conservative Party is generally dated to Sir Robert Peel’s Tamworth Manifesto of 1834. The dating of the Liberal Party’s beginnings is more controversial; historians often refer to governments until the death of Palmerston (1865) as “Whig”. In Bristol, as in many other places, “Conservative” and “Liberal” had generally replaced “Tory” and “Whig” to denote the local parties by the mid-1830s. Although the old terms were still understood and often used, the new ones were used by the parties themselves and to a large extent by the press. In this essay and in Appendix 4, therefore, I have only used “Tory” and “Whig” to refer to the allegiances of members of the Bristol Corporation prior to the Municipal Corporations Act 1835 and, where appropriate, with reference to national politics.

2. Frequent reference is made to the Census of April 1851. Although pre-dating the election by fifteen months, during which time men may of course have retired, changed or lost jobs or been promoted or demoted, it has been assumed that the world of work was more static than today and that, in the absence of evidence to the contrary in particular cases, individuals held the same positions in 1851 as in 1852.

Poll Books,<sup>1</sup> which flourished between the early eighteenth and mid nineteenth centuries, record the votes of electors at parliamentary (and some local)<sup>2</sup> elections, voting being public until 1872. It is important to note at the outset that these books were not statutory or official publications. Two consequences flow from this.

Firstly, Poll Books do not survive for every election in every place but were only produced when a printer thought he might turn a profit on the venture. Secondly, the extent of information given varies from one book to another. Some provide voters’ names and addresses only, and are of little interest to the historian.<sup>3</sup> Many of the surviving Bristol Poll Books, however, including that now reproduced, also provide occupational or other descriptions (“Baker”, “Gentleman”, etc.).

The editor first came to know the Bristol Poll Books when researching the political life of the City in the 1830s and 1840s. An earlier work<sup>4</sup> comments (too briefly) on the voting habits of certain categories of Bristol electors as revealed by the 1837 Poll Book. Having decided to undertake the reproduction of an entire Poll Book, the editor selected that of 1852 for three reasons.

The first was that the era between 1846 and 1867, in its political aspects, has attracted relatively little interest. The titanic battles over parliamentary reform and the Corn Laws are over; the great duel between Disraeli and Gladstone is yet to begin in earnest. It is hoped to show that the intervening period has much of interest in terms of national and local affairs, and of the interplay between the two. Secondly, in parliamentary terms the Liberals’ handsome victory gave them a hegemony which lasted over thirty years; whilst the Conservatives maintained control of the Town Council throughout this period,<sup>5</sup> they only managed briefly to return one of the City’s Members between 1852 and the abolition of the two-member seat in 1885. Finally, Poll Books were in decline long before the end of open voting in 1872 – their production was dealt a mortal blow, in practical terms, by Disraeli’s near doubling of the number entitled to vote in 1867 – and that of 1852 is the last published for Bristol, making this the latest date, modern exit polls notwithstanding, for which we can know who voted, and for whom, in the City.

I

Borough electorates before the Reform Act of 1832 varied greatly between the celebrated “rotten” boroughs on the one hand and places like Preston, whose “scot and lot” franchise gave nearly all adult males the vote, on the other. Bristol fell between the two, but was nearer the democratic end of the spectrum, one authority having estimated that between a quarter and a third of adult male Bristolians had the vote before 1832.<sup>6</sup> The franchise was possessed by the City’s freemen, who might become such by birth, apprenticeship to a freeman or marrying his widow or daughter. Taking up one’s freedom entailed a fee, but the political parties were often prepared to meet the cost for their voters in cases of need; in the run-up to the general election of 1812, 1,689 freedoms were taken up.<sup>7</sup> Also entitled to vote were owners of freeholds valued for rating purposes at forty shillings (£2) annually. Forty-shilling freeholders formed the electorate in the Shire Counties but were relatively few in number in Bristol. Their entitlement arose from the City’s unusual status as a “City and County”.

The Reform Act extended the borough franchise to include “householder” occupiers of property paying rent of at least £10 a year, if also liable to the poor <sup>3</sup> Frustratingly, the Bristol Poll Book for the General Election of 1847 is of this sort. Many can be identified in the 1852 Poll Book by a correspondence of name and address (see note 59) but the lack of descriptions makes a full comparison impossible.

rate.<sup>8</sup> (The net increase in the number of those qualified to vote was however limited by the Act's withdrawing the franchise from freemen resident more than seven miles from the town concerned. These non-resident freemen had formed a significant part of the electorate, in Bristol and elsewhere, before 1832.)

Complex registration provisions, especially those relating to prior residence and to the up to date payment of rates, made the years after 1832 a golden age for election lawyers. The register of freeholders and £10 householders was drafted each summer by the Overseers of the Poor in the parishes; the Burgess Book, which listed the freemen, was maintained by the Town Council. Disputed claims for, and objections to, registration were heard in the early autumn by two Revising Barristers, the political parties being represented by activists or instructed Solicitors. The list in its final form came into force on 1 December and was valid until 30 November the next year.

The 1851 register<sup>9</sup> contained 12,550 names, comprising 2,617 freemen, 1,589 freeholders and 8,344 £10 householders. The actual number of electors was less than 12,550 since some names appeared not only on the householders' list but also on the freemen's (the two lists being compiled by different authorities, as mentioned above). Of those who voted as householders in Bedminster in 1852, for example, 41 were registered also as freemen. Of those voting as householders in Clifton, 87 were registered also as freemen. Extrapolating these figures across the parishes and bearing in mind that some of those who stayed at home will also have been doubly registered, it is apparent that the number of individuals qualified to vote would have been significantly less than 12,550, probably by about a thousand.

It should be added that the attraction of registering as a freeman, in Bristol at least, had evidently fallen since 1832. Only 39 freedoms were taken up in 1851,<sup>10</sup> in contrast to the 1,689 of 1812. No doubt the fee of 3s 4d compared unfavourably with the shilling required to register as a householder, for those who had the choice. It is likely that the majority of freemen registered were survivors of the pre-reform electorate. Certainly, the political parties had by now turned their attention to the intricacies of ensuring their householder voters were duly registered.

A fully-fledged Liberal Registration Association was in being from 1835,<sup>11</sup> the Secretary from around 1850<sup>12</sup> being Thomas Field Gilbert<sup>13</sup> (L,<sup>14</sup> St Mary Redcliffe) who, with two of his staff, Daniel Pound Williams (L, Clifton) and John Williams (L, St Philip Out) is recorded as voting at this election. Although there is a long history of Conservative political clubs – the White Lion in the 1820s and 1830s and the True Blue in the 1840s, for example<sup>15</sup> – they had fallen behind in the game and it was the stimulus of defeat at this election which led to the formation of a Conservative Registration Association less than a month after the poll.<sup>16</sup>

According to the 1851 Census summaries,<sup>17</sup> the male population of Bristol was 61,621 (out of a total population of 137,328), of whom 27,938 were over 25 and 5,607 between 20 and 25. A division between those above and below voting age would have helped; in its absence, we shall assume that four fifths of the “20 to 25s” (4,486) were over 21. This gives 32,424 men of voting age. The 12,550 names on the register would represent 38.7% of these men, although this percentage must be discounted to take into account the double registrations mentioned above. It is nonetheless safe to assume that around 35% of adult male Bristolians possessed the vote.

The Valuation Survey of 1851<sup>18</sup> shows 24,085 dwellings rated to the poor rate. (This is somewhat more than the 20,873 inhabited houses referred to in the Census. It appears the Valuation Survey took into account apartments and the Census did not.<sup>19</sup>) The Census summaries do not show how many householders were women, but a fifth to a quarter of the whole is not inconceivable.<sup>20</sup> On this basis, the figure of 8,344 householder voters suggests that around 45% of male householders qualified to vote by meeting the £10 rental threshold.

As a final preliminary remark, the City of Bristol returned two Members to Parliament. Each elector therefore had two votes, although he need only use one. The voter might “plump” for a single candidate, “double” if his party had two candidates, or “split” across party lines. We shall see how this played out in the election of 1852.

II

The late 1840s and early 1850s are generally said to have seen the disintegration of party in Great Britain.<sup>21</sup> A majority of Conservative MPs deserted their leader Sir Robert Peel after his government (with Whig support) repealed the Corn Laws in 1846. The Conservative Party, under the Earl of Derby and his lieutenant in the Commons Benjamin Disraeli, was therefore arrayed against Peelites (Peel himself died in 1850) or free trade Conservatives. Neither faction was likely to obtain a parliamentary majority, but Whig divisions, notably between their two leading lights Lord John Russell (Prime Minister 1846–52) and Lord Palmerston, afforded tactical opportunities. Derby took advantage of these divisions to form a minority government in February 1852. In the hope of achieving an overall majority, he sought and obtained from the Queen a dissolution of Parliament and the country went to the polls in July.

The Conservatives, however, fought a lacklustre campaign. Whilst Disraeli had lost his former enthusiasm for agricultural protection, Derby sought to retain this plank in the Party’s platform pending the decision of the people. As a result, no clear lead was offered and it was said the Conservatives were protectionists in the Counties and free traders in the Boroughs.<sup>22</sup> Derby failed to obtain his overall majority. When Parliament reassembled in December, the government was defeated in the House of Commons and a Whig/Peelite coalition under the Earl of Aberdeen took office.

III

In Bristol, the general election of 1847<sup>23</sup> had seen the two sitting Members, the Liberal (Francis) Henry Fitzhardinge Berkeley<sup>24</sup> and the Conservative Philip William Skinner Miles,<sup>25</sup> returned with 4,381 and 2,595 votes respectively. The Conservative split over free trade was replicated locally and Miles was opposed by the retired soap manufacturer and former Alderman William Fripp,<sup>26</sup> standing as a Peelite Conservative. Fripp ran Miles close, coming third with 2,476. An independent radical, Apsley Pellatt,<sup>27</sup> secured 171.

Miles stood down at the 1852 election, the Conservatives apparently having decided that neither he nor Fripp was likely to secure election.<sup>28</sup> Miles may not have minded too much. A rising star in the early ‘40s, who had been cultivated by both Peel and Disraeli,<sup>29</sup> his parliamentary contributions had become fewer after 1847, possibly due to the rival claims of his business life. (Diversifying from the declining sugar trade, he was subsequently involved not only in banking but also in the development of Avonmouth Dock and its proposed railway link with the City, among other things.<sup>30</sup>) Forster Alleyne McGeachy,<sup>31</sup> formerly MP for Honiton, a Bristolian by birth and son of a quondam acting Governor of Barbados, was adopted as a candidate who would, it was hoped, square the circle regarding fiscal policy. McGeachy had voted in the Commons for Corn Law repeal in 1846 and generally favoured free trade, with the exception of the colonial sugar industry, of obvious importance in Bristol, which he said should be protected against competition from foreign (slave-grown and thus cheaper) sugar.<sup>32</sup> To the great disadvantage of the sugar interest, the Whigs had levelled the duties on foreign and colonial sugar on coming to power in 1846.

Miles’s retirement emboldened the Liberals to adopt a second candidate to run with Berkeley. This was the Mayor of Bristol (William) Henry Gore Langton<sup>33</sup> of Clifton, scion of a Somerset landed family and the son of a former radical Whig MP for the County of Somerset.

Free trade was the dominant election issue, the Liberals making much of the “Cheap Bread” cry and of the Conservatives’ dithering on the question, not to mention the paradox of McGeachy on the one hand expressing support for free trade generally but on the other, proclaiming his intention to vote in Parliament for whatever a Derby government might propose.<sup>34</sup>

Next in importance was the Catholic question. The furore following Pope Pius IX’s restoration of the English Roman Catholic hierarchy in 1850 had not yet died down. Berkeley had voted for Lord John Russell’s Ecclesiastical Titles Bill, which was introduced in response to the Pope’s coat-trailing and became law in 1851. Both

Langton and McGeachy, however, stated their intentions to go further, if elected, and to oppose the renewal of Peel's grant to the Irish Catholic seminary at Maynooth.<sup>35</sup> Berkeley, who supported the Maynooth grant, was thus the most liberal of the three candidates on this issue – an issue which was naturally inflamed by the rise of Puseyism within the Church of England at this time.<sup>36</sup>

Inevitably, the (secret) ballot was an issue in Bristol, since Berkeley was long the champion of this cause in Parliament, moving motions on the subject nearly every year of his time in the Commons (1837–70). Langton also supported the ballot but McGeachy, like most Conservatives and many conservative Whigs, was opposed to something he saw as unmanly and un-English.<sup>37</sup>

Lastly, as Berkeley was the sitting Member, his supporters were able to remind voters of his solicitude for Bristol in the House, as in his attempts to secure “our just rights” as a packet port and opposition to a Bill to enclose Durdham Down.<sup>38</sup>

The election produced the usual crop of addresses, broadsides, handbills and posters for public consumption. These are kept at the Bristol Central Reference Library<sup>39</sup> and from this collection the candidates' election addresses and a couple of doggerel poems are reproduced in Appendix 1 to this work.

Langton was first off the mark, his address (Appendix 1(a)), in anticipation of a dissolution of Parliament, being published in March by Henry Mills,<sup>40</sup> printer and editor of the Liberal Bristol Gazette. The appeal he sought to make to the voters is summed up in the phrases which appear in upper case in his address: “FREE TRADE”, “PROTESTANT INSTITUTIONS”, “PROGRESSIVE REFORM”, “EXTENSION OF THE SUFFRAGE” and “VOTE BY BALLOT”.

Berkeley's address (Appendix 1(b)), published by Mills around the same time, began with a quotation from Edmund Burke, who had represented Bristol from 1774 to 1780, to the effect that his (and by implication Berkeley's) canvass for the electors had not been made in the City but by his work in the House of Commons and elsewhere. This was a popular passage, which Berkeley, and at least one of his predecessors as Member for Bristol, had used previously.<sup>41</sup> There was no statement of policy; having been Member for the past fifteen years, Berkeley felt that “any assertion of principle is now needless”, but he was careful to remind voters of his family's centuries old link with Bristol, which he felt formed a link between the living and the dead (another Burkean touch).<sup>42</sup>

McGeachy's Address to the Electors of Bristol (Appendix 1(c)) was dated 24 May and published by John Taylor<sup>43</sup> (C, St Werburgh) of the Bristol Mirror and by John Gover Powell<sup>44</sup> of Small Street (C, St Werburgh). McGeachy was moved to have been asked to stand for his native city and expressed pride in his vote to repeal the Corn Law, although he did not think (in retrospect, in the light of the Pope's subsequent activities) that he had done the right thing in supporting the Maynooth grant. The future of the Empire, he said, depended on the “principles of progressive Conservatism” which he espoused; he expressed particular interest in the Colonies, defence and education, whilst his advocacy of “throwing open to Talent and to Merit every office in the State” reflects the contemporary concern with administrative reform which was to reach its fruition in the Northcote-Trevelyan Report into the Civil Service in 1854. He dealt shortly with Berkeley’s favourite nostrum: “Of the ballot I say nothing, because you and I are Englishmen”.

Some of McGeachy’s campaign slogans were familiar Conservative fare: “Church and Queen” was one, “The Bible, The Throne, The People” another. Yet another was “Free Trade and Commerce”, illustrating the special consideration he advocated for sugar and shipping – the latter having been hit by the late Whig government’s repeal of the Navigation Acts, which had for two centuries confined British commerce to British vessels, in 1849. The Liberals stuck to “Free Trade” pure and simple, even challenging McGeachy on the sugar question: one handbill read “Cheap Bread, Cheap Sugar, Vote by Ballot, Justice for All”.

Several handbills were illustrated and two of these have been reproduced in this work. The Liberals’ famed large (free trade) loaf and small (protectionist) loaf made an early appearance; these loaves were still being used by the Party in opposition to Joseph Chamberlain’s tariff reform campaign in the 1900s. Also shown is a Conservative handbill reminding voters that the foreign sugar for which the Liberals supported free entry was slave-grown – no doubt an attempt to sow unease in the minds of abolitionist Liberals.

There was as always much bad verse, usually intended to be sung to popular tunes of the day. “Old Bristol’s Refusal of Gore Langton” (Appendix 1(d)) highlights the rate increase which had occurred pursuant to Langton and others bringing the City under the Public Health Act 1848 and also contrasts the candidate’s giving a ball in Clifton with his failure to attend a meeting to support the building of a new hospital. There is even an attack on Langton’s wife who, it is suggested, would be no fit companion for the Queen should a royal visit take place (Langton was Mayor at the time). “Free Trade and the Big Loaf” (Appendix 1(e)) sums up the issues as the Liberals saw them, urging voters not to be led astray by the cry of “No Popery” but to stick with Berkeley, Langton and free trade.

Numerous meetings of operative (sometimes called “journeyman”) workers were held, mainly by the Liberals but some by the Conservatives, the resolutions passed being displayed on handbills, which are again in the Library Collection. Groups of cabinet makers, masons, printers and shipwrights, among others, held both Conservative and Liberal gatherings.

The Liberal meetings without exception stressed free trade, further extension of the franchise and the ballot coming close seconds among their priorities. The religious question was less prominent; interestingly, Berkeley’s support for Maynooth may be contrasted with a resolution of the Liberal journeyman coach makers, to the effect that there should be no state subsidy for any religious denomination, Protestant or Roman Catholic – a difference of emphasis which was to bedevil Liberalism up to and after Gladstone’s Education Act of 1870.

“Free trade” – at any rate in grain – was also prominent among the resolutions passed by Conservative meetings, many emphasising McGeachy’s vote to repeal the Corn Laws. A number of them joined the Conservative printers in lamenting what were seen as Liberal attempts, at their meetings, to divide employers and employees. The Conservative shipwrights naturally deplored the repeal of the Navigation Acts.

In contrast to Liberal praise for what were seen as the benign effects of the ballot in the United States, many of the Conservative groups contended that it had led to Louis Napoleon's recently established dictatorship in France.

There were official posters, listing the polling places and warning of the penalties for personation of voters, and non-party ones also; the Protestant Alliance recommended a vote for Langton who not only opposed the renewal of the Maynooth grant but advocated also the inspection of nunneries and repressing "Romish" practices in the Church of England; whilst Matthew Mathews,<sup>45</sup> producer of the eponymous Bristol directory and a prominent temperance campaigner, urged men to "frown down the contemptible offer of strong drink as payment for a vote and let the man who opens the public house be shut out of the House of Commons". The two Committee Chairmen, George Thomas<sup>46</sup> for the Liberals and John Vining<sup>47</sup> for McGeachy, indeed produced a joint address undertaking not to open the pubs, provide suppers or breakfasts or distribute colours. All these things were technically unlawful, although in the event it is doubtful either side stuck to the agreement (see further below).

The Press was as always keenly involved, the Conservative Bristol Times's description of Liberal supporters as "unmitigated ragamuffins" being milked by the Liberals for all it was worth and causing some embarrassment to McGeachy and his supporters.<sup>48</sup> The Conservatives were also embarrassed by a faux pas of Henry Bush<sup>49</sup> at a public meeting. McGeachy having spoken in favour of free trade, Bush exclaimed: "Come, gentlemen, we must be up and doing; we have two free traders [Berkeley and Langton] in the field!" He hastily corrected himself: "I mean two ballot men".<sup>50</sup> The campaign does not appear to have been unduly rowdy for the times, although it was suffused by the usual rough humour; one voter appeared at the polling booth dressed in rags and proclaimed himself one of the Times's ragamuffins and following the Conservative defeat a number of men wandered the streets "with bells and lanthorns", looking for Mr McGeachy.<sup>51</sup>

The list of polling places, "in case a poll is demanded", was duly published by the Sheriff, John Battersby Harford,<sup>52</sup> appearing in poster form and in the press (see for example the Mercury for 3 July). The details appear in Appendix 2 and shed some light on the demographics of mid-nineteenth-century Bristol.

Following the traditional vote by show of hands, a poll was (of course) demanded and took place on Friday 9 July, between 8 am and 4 pm, then the lawful voting hours.<sup>53</sup> As has been mentioned, there were a number of double registrations, including some prominent citizens: the three members of the Bush family who voted,<sup>54</sup> two as householders (C, Clifton and C, St Leonard) and one as a freeholder (C, St Augustine) were also registered as freemen, as was the City's six times Mayor,

Sir John Kerle Haberfield,<sup>55</sup> who voted as a householder in St Leonard's parish (S:B/M). There does not however appear to have been any widespread attempt at fraud; the Poll Book only records three as voting twice, being William Hitchings, a freeman cabinet maker in St James' (once Conservative and once splitting for Langton and McGeachy), John Light, a clock maker in St Paul registered as both freeman and householder who voted in both capacities (Liberal both times), and John Hill, a householder for whom the Poll Book gives no occupation (once Conservative, once Liberal) in the Out Parish of SS Philip and Jacob. (Strangely, in each case the Poll Book counts both votes towards the totals, although both the votes of these three men would have been discounted – a lapse it seems on the part of the compilers.)

According to the Poll Book, 7,929 voted, being 63.2% of the 12,550 registered, although taking the double registrations into account, the percentage turnout would have been higher – probably approaching 69%.

Householders, the vast majority of the voters, might be registered in respect of a residence or business, works or other premises; the first voter listed in the Poll Book, the banker and former Councillor Peter Freeland Aiken<sup>56</sup> (C, All Saints), for example, lived in Clifton but was registered in respect of his business premises in the High Street in All Saints' parish. Nor was there any requirement to vote at the polling place in your "home" parish; again by way of example the Solicitor Charles Brittan, registered in respect of his freehold home in Meridian Place, Clifton, voted (L) in the Castle Precincts, presumably near to his place of business in the city centre.

An economic analysis published in 1999<sup>57</sup> divides Bristol parishes of the early Victorian age into three categories and it is of interest to compare these parishes (as shown on the accompanying map) with the analysis of votes at the start of the Poll Book. Those in the first category, the "Inner zone" or "Central Business District" are mainly relatively small. Ignoring those who split across party or plumped for one of the two Liberal candidates, it will be seen that of these "central" parishes, tiny All Saints (18 to 15) and St Ewen (eight to six) had slim Conservative majorities in 1852 and slightly larger St Leonard and St Werburgh had larger ones (37 to nine and 44 to 33 respectively). St Thomas was Liberal by 69 to 61, as were St Mary-le-Port (28 to 14) and St Peter (77 to 39). St John was tied at forty all.

Of the parishes defined as falling within the "Intermediate zone (mixed housing/industry)", St Stephen was Conservative by 104 to 62 and St Nicholas by 86 to 53. The others were Liberal, Christ Church by 38 to 33, St James by 417 to 164 and the ward of Castle Precincts by 100 to 32.

The "Outer zone (predominantly residential)" includes St Augustine with a Conservative majority of 272 to 185 and five parishes with Liberal majorities: St Mary Redcliffe (236 to 165), the In Parish of SS Philip and Jacob (146 to 61), St Michael (143 to 123), St Paul (411 to 147) and the Temple (171 to 75).

This particular analysis is confined to the old City and does not include three parishes forming part of the parliamentary Borough. These are Clifton, Conservative by 461 to 327, Bedminster, Liberal by 469 to 276 and the sprawling Out Parish of SS Philip and Jacob, Liberal by 652 to 266. Mention should also be made of the District of the United Parishes of St James and St Paul, a ward for political rather than ecclesiastical purposes, Liberal by 310 to 190.

<sup>57</sup> Spencer Jordan, Peter Wardley and Matthew Woollard, "Emerging Modernity in an Urban Setting: nineteenth century Bristol revealed in property surveys", Urban History 26.2 (1999), pp. 190–210.

Looking at the occupational categories in the various parishes, it is clear the more affluent parishes leaned towards the Conservatives and those less well-heeled to the Liberals. This accords with Professor John Vincent's view of a contest in Bristol between "the forces of order and the scruffier elements of society".<sup>58</sup> It would however be mistaken to see this election, or other Bristol elections of the period, as fought in purely class terms. For one thing, in an age without a mass, industrialised and unionised working class, "class" meant something different to what it has meant since. Most units of production and retail were small and the butchers, bakers, carpenters, smiths and other skilled men who made up the majority of the Bristol electorate are probably better described as the "artisan classes" than as a class. Secondly, politicians were not in the habit of appealing to particular sections of the community with modern style spending promises. Welfarism was not yet a gleam in the eye of most Liberals and did not really become so until the advent of Lloyd George in the 1900s. Nor did Disraeli's youthful enthusiasm for "one nation" Toryism bear much practical fruit on his ascent to the Conservative leadership in the Commons. Laissez-faire, in short, reigned.

We may conclude that whilst class (in the early Victorian sense) was certainly a factor in determining voting preferences, it was only one among many and was refracted through the myriad mirrors of denomination, business and employment relationships, hereditary and family loyalty and monetary influence which are discussed in more detail below.

The overall result appeared in the Mercury for 10 July and showed the Liberals as comfortably victorious, the figures being given as

Berkeley (Liberal) – 4,649
 Langton (Liberal) – 4,508
 McGeachy (Conservative) – 3,665.

The Poll Book figures differ slightly, being Berkeley – 4,642
 Langton – 4,489
 McGeachy – 3,648.

Human error of this sort is not unknown, recounts being a feature of elections to this day – although none would have been needed here, since the outcome was beyond doubt.

McGeachy had at least succeeded in uniting the fractured Conservative vote of 1847.<sup>59</sup> Of 428 who had plumped for Miles, and who voted again in 1852, 370 (86%) voted for McGeachy; of 395 plumpers for Fripp, he received 311 (79%), including the Solicitor and Councillor Robert Phippen<sup>60</sup> (Bedminster), whilst of 260 Conservative loyalists who had voted for Miles and Fripp, 231 (89%) voted for McGeachy. He was however unable to reach out beyond this safe Conservative territory. Of 406 who had split for Fripp and Berkeley, and might therefore be considered free traders first and Conservatives (if at all)<sup>61</sup> second, only 102 (a quarter) voted for McGeachy in 1852. In short, the Conservative attempt to please everyone on the fiscal question was a failure.

<sup>59</sup> Bristol Poll Book (1847). More would have voted for one or both of the Conservative candidates than are recorded here. The lack of occupational descriptions in the 1847 Poll Book makes a full concordance impossible so I have confined myself to those who can with near certainty be identified as voting at both elections: see note 3.

IV

Why produce a Poll Book? Apart from satisfying the curiosity of some as to how their friends, acquaintances and foes voted, the books were primarily an important resource to the parties when it came to canvassing at the next contest – which was never far away, since a third of the 48 elected seats on the Town Council came up for grabs each year – as well as in contested cases before the Revising Barristers (see above). Some said Poll Books were also used to facilitate “exclusive dealing” – encouraging your supporters to trade only with businesses of their political stripe. Certainly, a municipal Poll Book produced for the Clifton ward contest of 1844 contained occupational details and highlighted Conservative voters in blue, although the Conservatives denied accusations that encouraging “exclusive dealing” – which was generally frowned upon – was the intention.<sup>62</sup>

Mystery surrounds some aspects of the Poll Books. As Professor Vincent pointed out in his overview of the Poll Books nationally, it is unclear how the occupational and other categories, which are their principal source of historical interest, got into the books in the first place.<sup>63</sup> The occupations of many will of course have been common knowledge, but was enquiry made of others? If so, were the answers taken at face value or “doctored”? Professor Vincent refers to the possible use of street directories,<sup>64</sup> but it is doubtful this figured in the preparation of the Poll Book reproduced here, since there are too many differences between the occupations in the book and those in Mathews' Bristol Directory for 1852. To take one mildly amusing example, John Sergeant (C, Bedminster) is described in the Poll Book as “Naturalist”, whereas Mathews gives him as “Preserver of birds”.

Another question occurring to the editor is, who made any enquiries as to voters’ occupations? It was not part of the poll clerks’ statutory function but might they have been offered an unofficial extra consideration? Or did the publisher send his own representatives to the polling places? We do not know.

Linked to these questions is the perplexing fact that as many as 944 voters – nearly 12% of the whole – appear without any description. Only 92 of these 944 appear in Mathews' list of the “Gentry, Professors, Merchants and Tradesmen” of Bristol, which suggests we are talking mainly about those from the lower echelons of society, whose occupations might not have been known by repute. Did some refuse to say? Or, at times of heavy polling, was there simply not enough time to put the question? Again, we can only surmise.

What we know for certain is that the Poll Book for 1852 was published the following year by Henry & Alfred Hill, printers of Castle Green. We know that Henry Hill voted in the Castle Precincts but Alfred does not appear to have voted; the Alfred Hill, carver and gilder, who voted (S:B/M) in St Stephen’s was very probably another man.<sup>65</sup>

Henry Hill voted Conservative, as he had done at the elections of 1841 and 1847. His political leanings are not however reflected in the Poll Book. Some previous Poll Books had been blatant in their bias; for the first post-reform election in December 1832 two Poll Books were produced, one Tory, one Whig,<sup>66</sup> and mention has been made of the “blue” Clifton Poll Book of 1844. The 1852 Poll Book, however, contains no election addresses or highlighting in blue but merely the facts and figures.

Votes are recorded by parish and within each parish are listed in order of first letter of surname and divided into householder (“ho.”), freeholder (“fh.”) and freeman (“f.”). At the end of the book, there appear the out voters for Gloucestershire and Somerset, being those freemen resident within seven miles of the City and having a sufficient connection therewith to qualify to vote in Bristol under the 1832 Act. The Gloucestershire out voters include the Town Clerk, Daniel Burges, jun.<sup>67</sup> (C) – presumably included here in error since his address is given as Brislington, then in Somerset.

There are other occasional errors. The builder and developer Benjamin Stickland<sup>68</sup> (L, Westbury on Trym), for example, appears as “Strickland” and Stewart Williamson<sup>69</sup> (L, Clifton), who is shown as a Unitarian minister, was in fact a Baptist. Family historians using the Poll Books will no doubt have heed to such things.

Nearly nine out of ten voters are given an occupational or other description, such being discussed further below. There are a couple of curiosities. A few voters are listed as “(Blind)”, probably to distinguish those who were unable to verify their written particulars held by the clerk, without assistance. We cannot however know how Thomas Burt, described as “(in Australia)” was able to vote (L) in the District ward; there was no facility for postal or proxy voting,<sup>70</sup> so presumably he had temporarily returned to Bristol.

V

The historical interest of the Poll Books lies in considering why men voted as they did. It is to this question that we now turn. What follows should be read in conjunction with Appendices 3 and 4, respectively breaking down voters into occupational, etc. categories and containing biographical notes on the prominent citizens who voted in 1852.

We can of course never know why an individual voted as he did, any more than we can know (to quote a famous phrase), “the thoughts that come between a man and his pillow”.<sup>71</sup> We have no more than clues, and these in very few cases. It is not surprising that Conservative members of the Town Council, whether past, present or future, nearly all voted Conservative – with one or two splitting (see below) – or that Liberal members very generally voted Liberal, an exception being the West India merchant and former Liberal Councillor James Cunningham<sup>72</sup> (C, St Nicholas). <sup>73</sup> Appendix 4.

Leonard) and the Quaker pin manufacturer Robert Charleton<sup>74</sup> (L, Westbury) are also predictable.

The electorate, to begin with, was middle-aged and middle class. Of the 925 who voted in Clifton, it has only been possible to identify 39 as definitely under thirty in 1852, according to the previous year's Census. The householder qualification no doubt barred many still beneath a parental roof. Again, only 34 Clifton voters over seventy have been identified with certainty. In Bedminster, the figures are 23 "youngers" and 17 "olders" out of a total of 841. (There would in fact have been (slightly) more of both categories, but where two men of the same name appear in the Census, it is not always clear which of them voted, especially where the Census address(es) do not coincide with the Poll Book ones.)

The votes of the younger and older electors are broken down in Appendix 5. Conventional wisdom is that the old are more conservative than the young and this is borne out in Clifton where (ignoring a few split votes and a plumper) twenty of those under thirty voted Liberal as against eleven Conservatives, whilst the over seventies were Conservative by 24 to ten. In Bedminster, however, both groups were Liberal by well over the average for the parish as a whole, the youthful by 18 to four and the elderly by 13 to two.

In class terms, we have at one end of the scale an elite, dominated by the merchant classes, with names like Ames, Cave, Daniel, Miles and Pinney to the fore.<sup>82</sup> Most of these men were significantly involved in the West India trade and a number of them had received substantial compensation when slavery was abolished in 1833; the Daniel (C, St Augustine) family<sup>83</sup> firm had received £250,000 of the £20 million set aside by Parliament for the purpose and George H Ames<sup>84</sup> (C, St Leonard) was awarded £60,000.<sup>85</sup> This elite would not have been out of place in County society; some, like the banker Thomas O Tyndall<sup>86</sup> (C, St Michael) had married into it and William Miles<sup>87</sup> (C, St Werburgh) was at this time Member of Parliament for East Somerset.

A handful of voters were indeed of aristocratic or County stock, among them the Dean of Bristol, Gilbert Elliot<sup>88</sup> (L, St Augustine), a kinsman of the Earl of Minto; Sir Thomas Clavering, Eighth Bart.<sup>89</sup> (C, Clifton), a former High Sheriff of Northumberland; John Loudon Macadam, jun.<sup>90</sup> (C, Clifton), whose family were Ayrshire lairds, and the Liberal candidate Henry Gore Langton<sup>91</sup> (L(B), Clifton) (his colleague Henry Berkeley was the son of an Earl but did not vote in the election, having – like McGeachy – no qualification in Bristol).

This social elite probably did not amount to many more than a hundred. At the other end of the scale, 179 voters are shown as “Labourer”, to whom should be added other unskilled men, including no doubt some of those for whom no description is given in the Poll Book. The unskilled probably did not exceed a few hundred.

In between, and comprising well over ninety per cent of those who voted, we have manufacturers, some with famous names like Wills and Fry,<sup>92</sup> lawyers, doctors, clerks, craftsmen, tradesmen, publicans, lodging house keepers and a host of others, who can together be seen as the City’s bourgeoisie – whether one prefaces the word with haute or petite in any given case.

VI

It would not however be possible to categorise in class terms every voter with an occupational or other description, even by reference to such basic concepts as “Upper”, “Middle” and “Lower”. A number of the Poll Book descriptions cover a multitude of possibilities. “Warehouseman” is an example. James Verry (C, Christ Church) and William Tucker (L(B), Christ Church) were, according to Mathews, partners in the firm of Verry, Nutting and Tucker, general warehousemen. Mathews, again, shows James Houston (C, St Augustine) as employed in a senior capacity as warehouse keeper to G. & J. Bush. Two others, William Braund and James Parker (both L, Bedminster) do not appear in Mathews but are shown as porters in the Census. The problem is that many other warehousemen do not appear in Mathews and in the vast majority of cases, the Census simply replicates the Poll Book description, taking us no further forward.

“Gardener” presents a similar difficulty. Thomas Raddenbury (L, Clifton), Benjamin A Duncan (L, Westbury on Trym) and George Bailing (L, Clifton) are among the few cases where the Census assists; the first was a nurseryman, the second a florist and the third a servant. So with “Waiter”, a wide-ranging term for men who waited on individuals or families in different ways. Henry Allen and Edward Boucher (both C, Clifton) appear in the Census as lodging house keeper and greengrocer respectively; James Coward (L, Clifton), as a servant. Most other gardeners and waiters are a closed book, and these are not the only descriptions to present problems of this sort – see the comments on accountants below.

Descriptions which are now archaic present further problems, particularly again in cases where the Census and/or Mathews simply replicate the Poll Book description. It should therefore be mentioned, for example, that an appraiser was a valuer. A blue manufacturer produced laundry dyes. “Brightsmith” had largely replaced “pewterer” for a man working with copper, tin or brass; 51 of the former, but only one of the latter, are shown as voting. A chairman carried people about in sedan chairs. A chandler was a general dealer, particularly one who equipped ships, and should not be confused with a tallow chandler who made candles. Retail dealers in certain products, notably cheese, leather and corn were called brokers or factors and furniture salesmen were known as furniture brokers. Accurate measurement was necessary by law in particular trades; thus we encounter a corn meter and a sworn timber measurer. A comb maker made combs for horses rather than humans. Curriers, fellmongers and tanners were engaged in various stages of producing and finishing leather. A fireman stoked fires rather than putting them out. Fly men and proprietors were the taxi drivers of their day.

Cosimo Cosimi (L, St James), whose name and description (“Image maker”) suggest a connection with the Roman Catholic Church, also dealt in plaster of Paris according to Mathews; the prominent Liberal family of Tothill<sup>93</sup> produced the similar “Roman cement”. “Japan” was a varnish. A last maker made moulds for shoemakers, a lath render fashioned wood into measured planks, etc. and lees and lyes went towards the making of soap. A modeller (probably) worked in clay. An oil and colourman dealt in paints but an oil merchant in vegetable oils. Ostlers tended horses at public houses. Overseers and relieving officers, assisted by beadle, administered the Poor Law. A patten maker made wooden shoes. Pipe makers made tobacco, rather than metal, pipes. Spring vans were used for furniture removal. Stays and trusses later came to be known as corsets, now themselves largely obsolete for fashionable (as distinct from medical) purposes. A tide waiter was a customs inspector. Makers of and/or dealers in tin goods and toys (the word may in some cases have included ornaments for adults) were sometimes called tinmen or toymen. A turner fashioned wood or, in the case of one voter, ivory. One water carrier appears and the editor first wondered whether he might have carried things by water (there is also a “Welsh carrier”, no doubt plying his trade across the Bristol Channel) but the Census shows this man as a “Labourer”. Lastly, whiting was ground chalk.

In Appendix 3, voters have been categorised largely according to the descriptions in the Poll Book, although certain cognate occupations have been bundled together (“Pig butcher” under “Pork butcher”, “Watercress dealer” under “Greengrocer”, for example). A few of my categories do not appear in the Poll Book: “Maritime trades”, for example, comprises block and pump makers, boat builders, sail makers, ships’ carpenters and chandlers and the myriad other small crafts and trades connected with the shipping interest; “Pedagogue” includes teachers of French, mathematics, music and other subjects; and Poor Law officers, police, railway and mail service personnel have likewise each been lumped together. Where possible, a man simply described in the Book as “at” a particular place of employment has been placed under “Labourer” (or whatever) by reference to his Census entry. Full details appear in the note to Appendix 3. With these exceptions, the Poll Book descriptions have been adhered to.

Bristol's great men are mainly described as "Esquire" or "Merchant" in the Poll Book. (Among the 59 sitting members of the Town Council who voted, 13 appear as "Esquire" and 14 as "Merchant".) The merchants include the celebrated Alderman Thomas Daniel<sup>94</sup> (C, St Augustine), approaching ninety and voting in his last general election, but many of the Esquires, among them the banker half-brothers Miles<sup>95</sup> (both C, St Werburgh) and Charles Pinney<sup>96</sup> (C, Clifton), were significant members of the mercantile community. Many of those designated "Merchant" were general merchants, frequently (as has been mentioned) trading to and from the West Indies; Robert Bruce<sup>97</sup> (L, St Stephen) and Robert Bright<sup>98</sup> (C, St Augustine), as well as Alderman Daniel, fall under this head. Others, like the silk merchant William Plummer<sup>99</sup> (C, All Saints) and Oliver Coathupe<sup>100</sup> (C, St Leonard), who manufactured and dealt in glass, were more specialist. The description "Merchant" (without more) thus appears a badge of status (see further below).

(Note: In the surveys of voting patterns which follow, unless stated otherwise the small numbers of split votes and Liberal plumpers are ignored.)

Esquires voted Conservative by 36 to ten, merchants by sixty to eight. Among other members of what we may call the City elite, bankers voted Conservative by seven to two; the majority included Daniel Cave<sup>101</sup> (C, St Leonard), scion of a famous family and Alderman Daniel's nephew. Conservative wine merchants, among them Joseph Avery<sup>102</sup> (C, St Mary-le-Port) and John Harvey<sup>103</sup> (C, St Augustine) outnumbered their Liberal fellows by 36 to eight. Army and Royal Naval officers, most if not all probably on half pay, were Conservative by 33 to eight.

Three Clifton voters, clearly from Bristol's upper echelons, appear without description: Sir Thomas Clavering<sup>104</sup> (C), Sir Thomas Hawker<sup>105</sup> (C), a retired General and the Hon. Charles Stuart<sup>106</sup> (C). Presumably the compilers thought that in these cases the title did duty for the description.

A man designated "Gentleman" – and there are 366 of them – seems to have been a cut below an "Esquire" and would not necessarily have passed as a gentleman in County society. John Loudon Macadam<sup>107</sup> (C, Clifton) probably would, but it is doubtful that the same can be said for example of the retired publisher Joseph Cottle<sup>108</sup> (L, Bedminster), or of Thomas Wise (L, St Mary Redcliffe), who appears to have been a retired carpenter and coffin maker.<sup>109</sup> Only five members of the Council are described in this way. Gentlemen voted Conservative by 210 to 130, a substantial margin but proportionately considerably less than the Esquires.

“Yeoman” had no exact meaning at this time but is generally regarded as denoting a fairly prosperous farmer or landowner. This would seem to be borne out by the fact that of the 34 so designated in the Poll Book, ten voted as freeholders and a further seven appear among the out voters. On the other hand, a number of the Poll Book yeoman are described otherwise in the Census, so probably had other or additional means of supporting themselves. James Davis (C, Westbury on Trym), certainly, appears in the Census as “Retired farmer”, but James Devonald (C, Westbury on Trym) appears as “Late in customs”, James Carey (L, St Philip Out) as “Half pay lieutenant”, Thomas Marshall (S:B/M, St Philip Out) as “Fundholder” and William Poole (C, St Philip Out) as “Garment maker”. Yeomen voted Conservative by 19 to eleven, those described as “Farmer” (with whom I have included one “Drover” in Appendix 3) by 16 to seven, unsurprisingly in an election which, more than most, pitted town against country.

Few of the learned professions reach double figures. There are 14 architects, Conservative by eight to four, Richard (Shackleton) Pope (Clifton) being among the majority and William Bruce Gingell<sup>110</sup> (St Werburgh) among the minority, with one plumping for each of the Liberal candidates. Surveyors were Conservative by six to two, but one splitter and one plumper – George Culley Ashmead<sup>111</sup> (Clifton) for Langton – bring their number up to ten. Appraisers, barristers, civil engineers, dentists, a mathematician, opticians and vets are each too few for their voting patterns to be of interest, but mention should be made of three prominent individual voters: the barrister and judge Arthur Palmer<sup>112</sup> (S:B/M, St Werburgh), the surgeon dentist Abraham Moseley<sup>113</sup> (L, St Augustine) and his fellow Jew the optician John Solomon<sup>114</sup> (L, St Mary Redcliffe).

The numerically significant professional men are, firstly, the Anglican clergy, Conservative by 56 to two; these men raise particular issues and will be considered in their place.

Secondly, we have solicitors and attorneys (the terms had slightly different technical meanings in law but by 1852 were generally interchangeable).<sup>115</sup> They were Conservative by seventy to 27. Appendix 4 includes a number of names which are (or were until very recently) well known among Bristol solicitors’ firms: Burges (C, Clifton; C, Gloucestershire out voters) and Salmon (C, Bedminster), Osborne and Clarke (both C, St John), Stanley (C, St Leonard) and Wasbrough (C, St Leonard; C, St Stephen), Fussell (C, St Leonard; C, District), Latcham (C, Clifton), Niblett (C, St Ewen) and Palmer (L(B), St John).<sup>116</sup> Also included are a number of lawyers who served on the Town Council and in other public capacities, among whom pride of place must go to the City’s Conservative six times Mayor Sir John Kerle Haberfield<sup>117</sup> (S:B/M, St Leonard). Professor Vincent has called the Law “an urban industry dependent on rural raw material” and has spoken of the pressure of rural influence on urban seats as being noticeable in Bristol, although admittedly less so than in rural market towns and cathedral cities.<sup>118</sup> Other solicitors will of course have had professional links to the commercial community.

Among medical men, those described as "Surgeon" voted Conservative by 42 to 28, and physicians by nine to nil. Among the minority of Liberal surgeons we find William Bird Herapath<sup>119</sup> (St Philip In), pioneering microscopist and scion of a radical family. The physicians include the epidemiologist William Budd<sup>120</sup> (St Augustine) and the pioneering anaesthetist Alexander Fairbrother<sup>121</sup> (Clifton). A number of doctors who served on the Town Council at various times or held office at the General Hospital or Royal Infirmary are also listed in Appendix 4.

It was barely twelve years since the publication of Nicholas Nickleby and Bristol no doubt had its Wackford Squeerses, so whether schoolmastering as a whole can be called a profession is a moot point. Whichever, those designated "Schoolmaster" or similar were Liberal by 27 to 14. Those I have called "Pedagogue", no doubt teaching adults in many cases, can probably be regarded as less unequivocally professional. They voted Conservative by ten to seven.

268 voters are described as "Accountant", a total exceeding all other categories except "Gentleman", and no doubt these men were key to the business life of the City. The Institute of Chartered Accountants was not, however, founded until 1880, nor did accountants acquire until many years later their modern functions of tax and financial advice. A Poll Book "Accountant" was thus more likely, it is suggested, to have been a book keeper or clerk than what we might now call a professional man. Of six Clifton Poll Book accountants who have been located in the 1851 Census, William H Rawle (C) appears as "Accountant" there also. Edward Bevan (S:B/M) appears as "Agent, Imperial Fire Office", but as "Accountant" once again in Mathews. The Census gives Joseph Almond (L) as "Commercial Traveller", Henry Stuchbury (L) as "Retired book seller", Joseph Townsend (C) as "Banker's clerk" and no occupation for Henry G Williams (C). 151 of the Poll Book accountants voted Conservative and 94 Liberal. (The overlap between what might now be called "white-collar" occupations is also illustrated by among others George Clibbett (L, Castle Precincts), "Traveller" in the Poll Book but "Accountant" in the Census.)

Esquires, merchants and some others have been called the Bristol elite but perhaps they are better described as an "old" elite; names such as Daniel, Pinney and so forth are redolent of the declining West India trade (although a family like the Mileses proved highly adaptable to changing economic conditions).<sup>122</sup> Although no hard and fast line can be drawn, a "new" elite can also be perceived. Some, like the Fry (all L, St James), Hare (C, St Mary Redcliffe; L, St Philip Out) and Wills (L, District; L, St Mary-le-Port) dynasties,<sup>123</sup> had already made their social, economic and political mark; others, like the paper manufacturer Elisha Smith Robinson<sup>124</sup> (L, St Thomas) were fast doing so. There were more non-conformists among them than among the "old", largely Anglican, elite.

Sifting out these "new" capitalists is no easy task. Some Census entries refer to the number of men an individual employed but most do not; it does not seem to have been a question the enumerator was required to ask and it may be the subject volunteered the information in some cases but not in others. In Appendix 3, therefore, I have distinguished men shown as "merchant" in a particular commodity (excepting wine) from sellers and dealers. Proprietors of warehouses have also been assumed to be in a bigger way of business than shopkeepers and dealers. I have also distinguished men described as "manufacturer", or by reference to a "factory" or "works", from mere "makers". Such distinctions may not be entirely accurate in determining the size of an enterprise; if on the one hand the "Hat manufacturer" Joseph Dando (L, Castle Precincts) is shown in the Census as "Master hatter", employing 35 men, it has to be said on the other that the members of the Hare family, heading one of the most significant enterprises in Bristol, are simply described in the Poll Book as "Floor cloth maker". It is however submitted that this is, generally speaking, an adequate analytical tool.

We find that merchants in particular things, and warehouse proprietors, were Conservative, but by a far smaller margin than those described as "Merchant" simpliciter; of a total of 188 voters in these categories, 94 were Conservative and 76 Liberal. Those designated "Manufacturer", etc., total 89, among whom the Liberals predominated by 49 to 28. Across the two groups, the parties were thus neck-and-neck, with 125 Liberals to 122 Conservatives.

Professor G.R. Searle has posited a sharp division between the merchant princes of the great towns and cities, men with national or international business connections who formed what might be called a quasi-“County” society, often marrying into land and sending their sons to the great public schools, and the manufacturing and mercantile community in general.<sup>125</sup> His analysis draws heavily on northern urban centres and if the division in Bristol, as it appears from the 1852 voting figures, is less clear cut, it is suggested this is a function of the more variegated nature of the City's economy, and consequent business and social connections, when set against northern towns where cotton, for example, was "King". The above figures nonetheless suggest a clear division between the newer substantial capitalists and those both above and below them in Bristol society. It is to those "below" that we now turn.

Small craftsmen and retailers made up the vast bulk of the electorate and were thus crucial to the outcome of the contest. Nearly all the main groups of these men voted Liberal by a greater or lesser margin – usually the former. For ease of reference, here is a list (in alphabetical order) of those occupational categories reaching three figures in Appendix 3, showing in each case the total number of voters and the numbers of those voting for each of the parties:

- 130 Bakers – Liberal 66, Conservative 47;
- 166 Beer houses – L 111, C 26;
- 112 Butchers – L 59, C39;
- 108 Cabinet Makers – L 57, C 32;
- 231 Carpenters – L 148, C 64;
- 247 Grocers – L 166, C 61;
- 114 Masons – L 55, C 48;
- 110 Painters – L 46, C 42;
- 251 Shoemakers – L 174, C 52;

171 Tailors – L 105, C 38;
 167 Victuallers – L 93, C 56.

If it be objected that no distinction is made between greater and smaller bakers, etc., or between masters and journeymen, Professor Vincent has pointed to the tendency, persisting until a much later date, of members of a craft or trade simply to distinguish themselves by reference to that craft or trade and the consequent headaches caused to statisticians.<sup>126</sup> (The figures, incidentally, do not bear out the general division he posited between Conservative butchers and Liberal grocers;<sup>127</sup> in Bristol in 1852, at any rate, both groups voted Liberal, although the margin was considerably greater among the grocers.)

The only significant groups to buck the Liberal trend are connected with the sea: ship builders, Conservative by 46 to 28, those called “Mariner” or similar, Conservative by 36 to nine and the host of smaller maritime trades, Conservative by forty to 31. The majority of these men were probably less than enamoured of the free trade measures of the late Whig government previously mentioned, namely the Sugar Duties Act and the repeal of the Navigation Acts. (It may be mentioned here that, among the Bristol elite, the survivors of the “West India” Whigs, who had fought a bitter electoral battle over slavery with their party’s abolitionists in 1830,<sup>128</sup> were by now largely assimilated to the Conservatives: men such as Captain Christopher Claxton<sup>129</sup> (S:B/M, Clifton), Robert Bright<sup>130</sup> (C, St Augustine) and Charles Pinney<sup>131</sup> (C, Clifton).)

Variations in the level of Liberal support among the craft and retail sectors are of considerable interest. The narrowest margins among the larger groups set out above are those for masons and painters. Among the smaller groups, booksellers were Liberal by a whisker (18 to 17) and tobacconists tied at 14 all. In all of these cases, the nature of their customer bases and business connections is likely to have been of importance; builders, for instance, whose links to masons are obvious, voted Conservative by thirty to 19. In the case of one bookseller, there is more direct evidence; Henry Reed, described as “News agent” in the Poll Book (L, St Philip Out) wrote to the Mercury that a number of his “bigoted and tyrannical neighbours” had threatened him with the consequences of not voting for McGeachy and that one, a Mr Braine, had withdrawn his custom and returned a delivery after the election<sup>132</sup> – this was presumably Samuel Brain (C, St Philip Out), a timber merchant whose address, like Reed’s, is given as West Street.

Again, those designated “Victualler” (with whom I have included landlords of named public houses in Appendix 3) were Liberal by 93 to 56, but proprietors of beer houses by the far greater margin of 111 to 26. The clienteles of the latter would have been more down-market than those of the former<sup>133</sup> and we must not neglect to mention here the influence which could be exerted by those not themselves qualified to vote.<sup>134</sup> The nature of their client base must also be assumed to have been relevant to the huge Liberal majority (31 to four) among pawnbrokers.

This is not however the end of the story because for many voters, their customers would have been folk of their own type and it makes no sense to argue that small businessmen were Liberal because other small businessmen and their families were Liberal. Professor Vincent has suggested that to a man working alone in his shop or yard, Liberalism may have provided a sense of belonging found by others on the factory floor or in the ranks of the armed forces.<sup>135</sup> Some may find this suggestion somewhat metaphysical and might prefer to emphasise the likely play of the election issues on those who voted, particularly that of free trade and consequent household prices – obviously a matter of the highest significance to those whom politicians now call the “just about managing” classes, as demonstrated by the Liberals’ hammering of, and McGeachy’s fatal equivocation on, this issue.

VII

We have discussed the possible influence of customers on businessmen’s voting, but what of the more direct influence master might exert on man? The alleged “screw” exercised by employers over their men is certainly a matter to which advocates of the ballot, of whom Henry Berkeley was for many years the leader, referred regularly in the House of Commons.<sup>136</sup>

The difficulty is that in only a handful of cases do we know for whom a particular voter worked. These cases are a mixed bag but in the majority of them the employee voted as did the boss. On the Conservative side, there is a correspondence between Richard Lane, “at Mr Niblett’s” (Castle Precincts) and Isaac Niblett<sup>137</sup> of the White Lion (Christ Church); between Daniel Britton, “Accountant at Miles’s” (District) and the Miles half-brothers<sup>138</sup> (St Werburgh); between G. & J. Bush’s warehouse keeper James Houston (St Augustine) and the Bush family<sup>139</sup> (Clifton, St Augustine and St Leonard). The Hare family<sup>140</sup> papers show that John Ancrum, accountant of Bedminster, worked for their firm<sup>141</sup>; he voted Conservative, as did they. There is a similar correspondence on the Liberal side between Henry Cross, “Clerk at Wedmores [Italian Warehouse]” (District) and his employers (L and L(L), St Werburgh); between John Higgins, “Bailiff to J.N. Sanders” (St Philip Out) and John Nash Sanders of Fielding House (Clifton); between John Spring, “Cooper (Castle & Co.)” (Castle Precincts) and the Castle dynasty<sup>142</sup> of brewers and distillers (Clifton, St Mary Redcliffe and St Paul); and between John Young, “Shopman at Naish’s” and Henry<sup>143</sup> and Joseph Naish (all Castle Precincts).

The “screw” may have been exercised in any or all of these cases, and no doubt was in a number of instances. George Pryce of Hillgrove Street said in a letter to the Mercury<sup>144</sup> that his employer, the clothier Richard Lillington (C, St Nicholas), had sacked him for refusing to commit himself to voting for McGeachy. The next week's edition,<sup>145</sup> however, contained a response from Lillington's partner, DH Walsh (a Liberal, on Pryce's own account) to the effect that Pryce had been given notice for absenting himself without leave to act as an Under-Sheriff on election day. The Mercury itself seems to have been dubious about Pryce's claim, as they appended a letter from Robert Carpenter<sup>146</sup> (L, St Mary-le-Port) of the Liberal election committee speaking of Lillington's "very kind and gentlemanly behaviour" when his workers were canvassed for Berkeley and Langton. Pryce's evidence is thus tainted, but this does not mean the "screw" was never exercised; in the nature of things, employees who succumbed to it would not have written to the newspapers.

In discussing the question of possible coercion by employers, it is however worth remembering that in a relatively small enterprise, where the employer/employee relationship would necessarily have been more intimate than today, an employer would very probably have given consideration to a man's personal congeniality before taking him on and this may well have included political congeniality. Again, there may have been cases in which the man had genuine respect for the master's political wisdom and others in which, whilst not necessarily fearing for his livelihood, he simply preferred a quiet life in the workplace. We cannot know.

Not all men voted as did their masters. Benjamin Purnell the tobacco manufacturer (St Thomas) split for Berkeley and McGeachy but Edward Green, "Shopman at Purnells" (St Philip Out) voted Liberal. Samuel G. Clements (Clifton) was Conservative; not so Edward Ledger, "at S.G. Clements'" (St James), who split for Langton and McGeachy. Robert Gaster, "at G. & J. Bush's" (S:B/M, St Philip Out) was another splitter whose employers were Conservative. George Moyce, clerk "at Osborne & Wards" (St Philip Out) went still further, his outright Liberal vote distinguishing him from the Conservatism of the firm's partners Robert Osborne, Arthur Knapp and Charles Ward<sup>147</sup> (the first two St John, the last Clifton).

Those designated "Labourer" show a small Conservative majority of 82 to 74. Professor Vincent has suggested that labouring men may in some cases have voted Conservative to spite Liberal employers.<sup>148</sup> Whether such a thing could have been done with impunity (on either side), either out of spite or political conviction, would clearly have depended on a number of factors, namely the pre-existing relations between master and man, the employee's general competence and usefulness, the state of the labour market in the particular trade and the strength or otherwise of the employer's political views. It may be that some liberal minded employers were happy for their men to follow their own judgments (at least as regards one of their two votes), but this is speculation.

The most prominent government employee to vote was Thomas Field Gilbert<sup>149</sup> (L, St Mary Redcliffe). Listed as "Secretary, Liberal Association", he was also Registrar of Births, Marriages and Deaths at this time. This should not cause surprise since, as Professor Robert Stewart has commented, "patronage...still oiled the wheels of politics" in the era between the Reform Acts of 1832 and 1867,<sup>150</sup> government posts being a legitimate prize in party warfare.<sup>151</sup> It is therefore suggested (although without evidence) that, for example, the six customs men who voted (2 C, 3 L and one S:B/M) may have been fulfilling pre-existing obligations. (Mathews shows Thomas Field Gilbert, jun. as a clerk at the Customs Office, although he did not vote in this election.)

More local than central government officials voted, although needless to say neither were anywhere near as numerous as they are today. The Tories/Conservatives dominated Bristol local politics for most of the century but even in the days of the oligarchic Bristol Corporation before the Municipal Corporations Act of 1835, do not seem to have insisted on a monopoly of patronage.<sup>152</sup> By 1852, indeed, the feeling existed in many quarters that political allegiance was less important than ability to serve the City.<sup>153</sup> For whatever reason, men of both greater and lesser prominence appear on both sides. Conservative voters include the Town Clerk Daniel Burges<sup>154</sup> (Gloucestershire Out voters), the Borough Treasurer Thomas Garrard<sup>155</sup> (St Michael) and his deputy (and successor) John Harford<sup>156</sup> (Bedminster), the Clerk of the Market Joseph Thomas<sup>157</sup> (St James) and two ceremonial officials, the Sword Bearer F Greville Prideaux,<sup>158</sup> a solicitor and former Alderman, and City Trumpeter James Filer<sup>159</sup> (both St Paul). Among Liberal voters we find Thomas John Manchee,<sup>160</sup> the writer and publicist who became Clerk to the Charity Trustees (District), District Surveyor William Armstrong<sup>161</sup> (St Paul), Inspector of Nuisances William Sayer<sup>162</sup> (District) and at a much lower level, Stephen Rogers, jun., "Clerk at Council House" (St Michael). James Harris<sup>163</sup> (St Stephen), a solicitor whose duties included the clerkship of the Sanitary Authority, cast a Liberal plumper for Berkeley.

Professor Vincent wrote that in his view, "There was little interest in the possible differences in voting between different grades of railwaymen and policemen, but much in the question of how far the personnel of a railway or police force voted as a corps",<sup>164</sup> although his work does not elaborate on the point. In this election, police personnel (among whom I have included civilian staff) were Liberal by 15 to three, which is at first sight surprising to those accustomed to associate the forces of order with the political Right. Only at first sight, however; Bristol's and other municipal police forces owed their existence to the Whigs' Municipal Corporations Act of 1835. Cater (Gloucestershire Out voters), voted Conservative.) It is also of interest that as many as six, including Inspectors Thomas Pym Attwood (St Augustine) and Henry Philips Webb<sup>165</sup> (St Philip Out), split for Langton and McGeachy, which means that four fifths of the 26 police personnel voted for Langton one way or another. It is known that as a Councillor, he sat on the Watch Committee and took an enthusiastic interest in policing matters.<sup>166</sup>

Railway personnel voted Liberal by twelve to three, with three others splitting for Berkeley and McGeachy and two plumping for Berkeley. One factor influencing the politically aware may have been the Conservatives' image, as regards railways, at this time. The Party had a number of backbench MPs who can only be described as mechanophobes, the celebrated Col. Charles Sibthorp<sup>167</sup> being the best known. Derby and Disraeli, anxious to shed the Party's agriculturalist and reactionary image, probably had little time for such men, but they could well have left a brand on Conservatism in the public mind.

If the possibility of loss of custom or employment may be called a "stick" operating on many voters, there were also "carrots" which must be considered. Contemporaries would have been particularly interested in the behaviour of the freeman voters as a group. Freemen were thought by many Liberals to be the most venal part of the electorate and some radical Whigs, including Edward Protheroe, jun., then MP for Bristol, had pressed for their exclusion from the franchise under the Reform Bill.<sup>168</sup> (In the event, Parliament agreed to existing freemen and their sons and apprentices, if born or indentured before the Reform Act came into force, retaining the franchise, but new creations were not to confer the right to vote.) Many of them, certainly, came from the less well-heeled sections of society; of the 1,241 freemen who voted in this election, the editor would only count 314, or just over a quarter, as belonging to the classes of the Esquires, gentlemen, greater or lesser merchants, or to the learned professions.

According to Liberal propaganda, bribery and corruption were exclusively Conservative; the Bristol Mercury reported that during the campaign, "the Tories [had] in some places given beer and spirits, and suppers and breakfasts, and colourable employment", whereas the only refreshment provided by Liberal canvassers in the Out Parish of St Philip was "iced spring water".<sup>169</sup>

Freemen voters show a Liberal majority, 580 to 560, among a total of 1,241 who voted – a much smaller majority than among the electorate as a whole, which Liberals might have seen as evidencing the prevalence of Conservative bribery and treating. From another angle, however, there was after all a Liberal majority, which might suggest that some freemen were not as corruptible as was thought, or that in other cases the Liberals' own hands were not as clean as they liked to contend. Certainly, the Conservative Bristol Times asserted after the election that "the night between the nomination and the poll was actively, but we cannot say honestly, spent by our opponents" and reminded readers that Langton had said money was, to him, no object.<sup>170</sup> It would be surprising if monetary, alcoholic and other inducements had not played their part, on both sides and among householder as well as freemen voters; the ubiquity of such things in the years after 1832 has been amply demonstrated by Professor Gash's definitive study of the period.<sup>171</sup>

Despite the Times's grumbling, no Conservative petition against the result was brought, nor it is suggested would the Liberals have petitioned had the election gone the other way. Both sides knew from bitter experience the legal difficulties of making such things stick, unless direct agency could be proved, demonstrated by the failed petitions against the return of the Conservative Sir Richard Vyvyan in 1832 and against Berkeley's own election in 1837.<sup>172</sup>

It should be mentioned that the votes of the forty-shilling freeholders are much more in line with the overall result than the freemen's. Of the 326 who voted, 180 freeholders were Liberal, 126 Conservative.

VIII

We have assumed so far that men voted according to their interests, economic or social. But what of those who may have voted contrary to what political analysts might see as their interests? The politics of conviction is a thorny subject, but should not be ignored, as those two perennials of our political history, the Champagne Socialist and the Tory Working Man, demonstrate. What, for example, impelled Harman Visger<sup>173</sup> (L, Westbury-on-Trym) – merchant, Anglican, pillar of the Commercial Rooms – to devote his life to radical causes? There were no doubt a host of others like him, on both sides and at all levels of society, and the sophisticated focus groups and polling techniques employed today by political parties and scholars might tell us much. Unfortunately, they did not exist in 1852 so it is largely profitless to speculate about voters' ideological motivation, except in one closely related area: religious denomination.

Here we reach the core of nineteenth-century political division. 56 Church of England clergymen out of sixty voted Conservative and two Liberal. The latter were the Dean, Gilbert Elliot<sup>174</sup> (St Augustine), who came of an aristocratic Whig family, and James Mackintosh<sup>175</sup> (District), not a parish priest but, according to Mathews, master of a grammar school in Stokes Croft. Two Clifton clergymen, Henry Hinxman and William Knight, split for Langton and McGeachy, possibly out of Protestant conviction, possibly out of regard for a respected local man.

Non-Anglican clergy are equally strongly Liberal. The largest groups are those listed as "Dissenting minister" or "Dissenting preacher", who appear from Mathews and the Religious Census of 1851 to have been mainly Independent (Congregationalist) (twelve) and Baptist ministers/preachers (six), but there are individuals listed as "Wesleyan minister", "Latter Day preacher", "Catholic priest" and "Jewish reader". Of these men, Robert James, "Dissenting minister" in the Poll Book and Wesleyan in Mathews (Westbury-on-Trym), voted Conservative and another dissenting minister William Hawkins (District), who does not appear in Mathews, split for Berkeley and McGeachy. The rest were Liberal, as were three other non-conformists shown as "City Missionary".

A further division should however be noted. Some zealous Protestants thought Henry Berkeley, who despite his vote for the Ecclesiastical Titles Act supported the continuation of the Maynooth grant, insufficiently sound on the Popery question. This is the reason the Baptist minister George Henry Davis<sup>176</sup> gave, in a letter to the Bristol Times,<sup>177</sup> for plumping for the more hawkishly Protestant Langton. Plumpers for Langton were also cast by the Independent ministers John Beighton<sup>178</sup> (District) and Henry Isaac Roper<sup>179</sup> (St Michael) and the Wesleyan Francis Reggall (Clifton). These men are mirrored by the Roman Catholic priest Father Nicholas O'Donnell<sup>180</sup> (St Philip Out), who plumped for Berkeley (as regards the Irish vote generally, see below). Another plumper for Berkeley was cast by the Catholic architect Charles Hansom<sup>181</sup> (Clifton).

The Conservatism of the Anglican clergy is reflected by their lay staff; four Scripture readers voted, all Conservative, and sextons are Conservative by nine to one, the exception being Thomas Edwards, listed as sexton of Castle Green [Independent] Chapel (L, St Philip Out). Digging a little deeper, we find for example that the tailor John Hallam (C, St Thomas) was also according to Mathews clerk of St Thomas's Church. Mathews also shows that John Biggs (C, Clifton), listed in the Poll Book simply as "Schoolmaster", was in fact master of the (Anglican) National School. Another Clifton voter, William Hawkes, "Master [of the non-conformist], British School", was equally unsurprisingly Liberal. A lone Liberal Anglican sub-sacrist (John Hunt, St Augustine) bucked the general trend.

There is, as Professor Vincent observed "no royal road" to a comprehensive assessment of the impact of denominational allegiance on lay voting generally,<sup>182</sup> but there are several indications among public figures who were zealous in Church or Chapel. Anglican Conservatives included the Evangelicals Charles Pinney and Thomas Porter Jose<sup>183</sup> (both Clifton) and the High Churchman Robert Phippen<sup>184</sup> (Bedminster), as well as the journalist and sometime "Bristol Churchgoer" Joseph Leech<sup>185</sup> (St Werburgh). This is not to say there were no Anglican Liberals; of 36 Liberal members of the Town Council elected before 1851 but continuing to sit thereafter, Dr Graham Bush listed 14 as Anglicans and three as "possible Anglicans", the remainder being non-conformists of various sorts. He only listed three non-conformists, however, among the Conservatives (along with two Jews and one unknown).<sup>186</sup>

Docks Committee and three who served around this time as deacons of Highbury Chapel: Solomon Leonard (Clifton), Abraham Salt (Westbury-on-Trym) and Thomas Waterman<sup>191</sup> (St Leonard). The brothers W.D. and H.O. Wills<sup>192</sup> (L, District; L, St Mary-le-Port) had strong associations with Highbury Chapel, as had the magistrate and former Liberal Councillor Richard Ash.<sup>193</sup> All the above represent Trinitarian dissent, but Liberalism is no less in the ascendant among the less orthodox, such as the Fry family<sup>194</sup> of Quaker chocolate manufacturers (all L, St James) and the Unitarian Thomas family,<sup>195</sup> who made soap (all L, St Philip Out).

There were a number of temperance zealots among the Liberals' non-conformist supporters, the Quaker Robert Charleton<sup>196</sup> (L, Westbury-on-Trym) notable among them, and the Mathews printing family<sup>197</sup> (L, St Peter) published the Bristol Temperance Herald at this time. It should therefore be remarked here that the Liberals at this time had it both ways as far as drink was concerned; the Liberal majorities among victuallers and keepers of beer houses have already been discussed. (The wholesale migration of the trade to the Conservatives did not occur until after Gladstone's Licensing Act of 1872.)

The above analysis, therefore, fully bears out Professor Stewart's conclusion that "the evidence of Dissent's support for Liberalism is clearer than the evidence for the party affiliation of any other group".<sup>198</sup>

IX

We consider now the ties of family and race. At the level of the great families and members of the Town Council, much Bristol political loyalty was dynastic. The pedigrees appearing in C.H. Cave's History of Banking in Bristol<sup>199</sup> give an invaluable picture of the ties of blood and marriage among the Caves, Daniels, Mileses and other (mainly Conservative) families making up the City elite. On the Liberal side, voters in 1852 include Frys, Willses, Thomases and Hares, to name but a few.<sup>200</sup> The bulk of members of these prominent families voted as would be expected, with little division of loyalty between the parties. The Hares are an exception; Sir John Hare (St Philip Out) had been an ardent reformer in 1830–2<sup>201</sup> and maintained his Liberal allegiance twenty years later. The management of the firm was, however, by now in the hands of his sons Charles Bowles Hare, John Hare and Sholto Vere Hare whose votes (all C, St Mary Redcliffe) reflect their corporate decision to contribute £25 to McGeachy's campaign fund<sup>202</sup> and all of whom, either in 1852 or later, sat as Conservative members of the Town Council.

With lesser men, it is less easy to comment. Using discretion in ignoring particularly common names, I have nonetheless counted 328 instances of two or more men of the same surname, occupation and Parish who voted. A statistic of this sort must be handled with care; the Census does not enable us definitely to establish family relationships in these cases, unless men were living under the same roof. It is nonetheless indicative that over three quarters of these (likely) family groups (256) voted the same way, suggesting the strength of family politics at all social levels.

Appendix 6 breaks down the votes of men whose surnames are strongly suggestive of Irish or Jewish roots. The Irish population of Bristol had reached 4,000, or nearly 3% of the whole, by mid-century.<sup>203</sup> Appendix 6 includes 110 names, just short of 1.4% of those who voted. A greater number of Irishmen than are included in the Appendix will naturally have voted, since many names can of course indicate English or Scottish, as well as possible Irish, origins. It is however doubtful that the number voting is proportionate to the Irish share of the total population; poorer, ghettoized Irishmen are less likely to have become householders and recent arrivals in the City would not have qualified to vote as freemen. Prominent men born in Ireland include the newspaper editor Joseph Leech<sup>204</sup> (C, St Werburgh) and Captain (RN) John and Colonel George Gore (L and C respectively, Clifton). Such men represent the Anglo-Irish Protestant Ascendancy, whose priorities would probably have been different, and have not been counted in Appendix 6.

The Appendix 6 Irishmen include 56 Liberals and 34 Conservatives. It is also of interest that as many as eight of them plumped for Henry Berkeley, one in nine of the 72 plumpers he received. It is suggested this is a function of the Catholic issue already discussed.

Bristol had by this time its first Jewish Councillor and Alderman, the brothers Abraham and William W Alexander<sup>205</sup> respectively, both sitting at the time of this election and both Conservative in their allegiance (although, probably for reasons related to the recent split in Bristol Conservatism, neither voted – see below). Politically aware Jews as a whole were, however, less likely to be Conservative. The Party was largely opposed to their admission to the House of Commons, from which conscientious Jews were barred until 1858 by the parliamentary Oath “on the faith of a Christian”; Lord George Bentinck’s forthright support of their cause had cost him the party leadership in the Commons in 1847.<sup>206</sup> (Disraeli, of course, was baptised into the Church of England and so able to sit in the House.) This would seem to be reflected in the votes of those known or assumed to be Jewish in Appendix 6; out of 28 voters, we find 24 Liberals and two Conservatives.

The editor is not aware of any men of colour among the voters at this election.

Women were not permitted to vote; a proposition tacitly understood from time immemorial had been reduced to writing in the 1832 Act. They had a small (and diminishing) influence on the composition of the electorate in that a man might have obtained a freedom – and thus, prior to 1832, the right to vote – on marrying a freeman’s widow or daughter. Compliments to the fair sex were however a staple of political rhetoric<sup>207</sup> and voters might be canvassed through their wives; an example of such canvassing is recorded during the general election of 1837<sup>208</sup> and it would not have been an isolated occurrence, either at that or subsequent contests. If in an open system, employers could impose a “screw”, it beggars belief that domestic influences, whether tender or termagant, played no part in determining men’s votes, and we should also remember that many small tradesmen would have habitually dealt with the woman, rather than the man, of the family.

X

Split votes have been largely ignored in the above analyses but should not go entirely unnoticed. Among those who split for Berkeley and McGeachy were Captain Claxton<sup>209</sup> (Clifton), the sugar refiner Conrad William Finzel, sen.<sup>210</sup> (Temple), Sir John Haberfield<sup>211</sup> (St Leonard), the Brazilian Consul William Jordan<sup>212</sup> (Clifton), the iron founder Thomas Lewis<sup>213</sup> (St Stephen) and the barrister and judge Arthur Palmer<sup>214</sup> (St Werburgh). Other splitters appear in Appendix 4, including the currently sitting Liberal Alderman Robert Leonard (St James). Berkeley was well regarded as a constituency MP,<sup>215</sup> which may have induced some of the great and good to overcome any scruples they may have had about his enthusiasms for Maynooth and the ballot.

At the other end of the social scale, splitters are notably strong among Labourers (11 B/M and 10 L/M out of 179). Was the intention in some cases to express your political view with one vote and to please your employer (whether Conservative or Liberal) with the other? If it was, it would not have done McGeachy any good; in an election with one Conservative candidate and two Liberals, the latter largely united on the main issues, the consequences of splitting are obvious.

Some of course did not vote at all. The turnout is in line with more recent contests; the last four general elections, at the time of writing (July 2019), have produced percentage turnouts in the sixties. Among prominent men, William Fripp, the Peelite Conservative candidate in 1847, is conspicuous by his absence from the Poll Book. His falling out with Miles had been bitter and presumably he was not mollified by the subsequent selection of McGeachy. Four sitting Conservative members of the Town Council did not vote, the brothers Alexander (see above), John Beames Burroughs<sup>216</sup> and John G Shaw.<sup>217</sup> In at least two of these cases the previous election may have cast a shadow; Shaw had nominated Fripp<sup>218</sup> and William Alexander had plumped for him<sup>219</sup> in 1847. Burroughs’ non-appearance is a mystery; he had voted for Miles and Fripp in 1847. So is the absence of the Liberal Councillor John Kempster.<sup>220</sup> (All other currently sitting Liberal Aldermen and Councillors voted.)

The non-appearances of the merchant Thomas Gadd Matthews<sup>221</sup> and of the Solicitor Edward Burges,<sup>222</sup> who had in 1841 founded the firm which became Burges Salmon, are two other minor mysteries. Voting in person being required, these men (and others) may have simply been out of town or ill on election day.

We have reached the limits of historical enquiry. Analysis of voting patterns has established a few “known knowns”, primarily the strong Conservative dominance among the old mercantile elite and the overwhelming Conservatism of Anglican clergymen and their lay cohorts – matched only by the overwhelming Liberalism of Bristol dissent. We have also identified a newer capitalist class, whose loyalties as a whole appear less clear cut than those of the old elite. We have established that the lower middle, or skilled artisan, classes who formed the great bulk of the electorate were, with the notable exception of the shipping trades, predominantly Liberal and that this is what decided the election for Berkeley and Langton. We have noted the much more even division of the party vote among the freemen and labouring men.

All else must be surmise. It is reasonable to assume that personal ideologies and economic interests and the arguments of the candidates will have had an effect, along with business connections, financial sticks and carrots of various kinds, denominational ties and those of family and in some cases ethnic origin, but in what proportion these were mixed in the case of any given voter, we cannot in most cases begin to guess.

Professor Vincent, moreover, sounded a salutary note of caution in pointing out that some would have voted “mindlessly” (as no doubt some still do).<sup>223</sup> His hope that the mindless voters were few and spread evenly across the parties must be echoed by every student of the Poll Books.

Even considering voters as members of occupational or other groups rather than as individuals, numerous questions remain. The Rev. A.B. Beaven posited an “occult connection between timber and Toryism”<sup>224</sup> and this is borne out by the votes of those designated “Timber merchant” (Conservative by eleven to two), although not by the timber dealers (Liberal by 14 to nil). How do we account for these things? And why were brush makers so overwhelmingly Liberal (by 37 to three)? Future business, denominational or family historians may shed light on these and other questions, but meanwhile silence must stand in the place of speculation.

“In my beginning is my end”. Returning to the epigraphs at the head of this essay, this republication of a Poll Book shows us just short of 8,000 Bristolians, most of whom are indeed perished as though they had never been. The researches of family historians may well provide links to a given employer, Chapel or other social or economic nexus shedding light on the choices of particular voters but in the vast majority of cases, whatever partial clues they may have left as to their political thought processes, the 1852 voters will ultimately be a mystery to us – still more, indeed, than they would have been to their fellow citizens at the time.

APPENDIX 1. ELECTION ADDRESSES AND SONGS

a) Mr Langton's Election Address

Gentlemen,

Mr Philip Miles having announced his intention not to offer himself again as a candidate for the representation of your City, I embrace the earliest opportunity of making known my determination to SOLICIT THE HONOUR OF YOUR SUFFRAGES, when the proper time for that step shall have arrived.

My political opinions, particularly on the all-important question of FREE TRADE, are, I believe, well known. It is my firm conviction, a conviction which has been handed down to me as a cherished and much valued inheritance, that a Protective Duty on Corn, is both unnecessary and unjust and that any return to a Restrictive Commercial Policy would inevitably tend to impair the energies and prosperity of the Country, and be productive of great and lasting discontent.

I consider that it is to our PROTESTANT INSTITUTIONS as settled at the Reformation that we are mainly indebted for the Civil and Religious Liberties of our Country and I should therefore give my warmest support to all such measures, as without infringing on the principles of toleration would protect those Institutions from covert attack from within our own Church, and open aggression from without.

Firmly attached to the Constitution of our Country, and the Liberties we enjoy, I consider that the integrity of that Constitution can be best preserved by advocating those measures of PROGRESSIVE REFORM, which may from time to time become necessary, by endeavouring to abolish the anomalies which still exist in our representative system, by supporting that further EXTENSION OF THE SUFFRAGE, to which the Loyalty, Love of Order and the increasing intelligence of the British People so justly entitle them, and the free exercise of which can be best secured by VOTE BY BALLOT.

I have the honour to remain, Gentlemen,

Yours very faithfully,

WILLIAM H GORE LANGTON

b) The Hon. Henry Berkeley's Election Address

TO THE ELECTORS OF THE CITY AND COUNTY OF BRISTOL

"My Canvass for you was not on the Exchange, nor in the Clubs of this City. It was in the House of Commons; it was at the Customs; it was at the Treasury; it was at the Admiralty.

I Canvassed you through your affairs, not your Persons. I was not only your representative as a body, I was the agent, the Solicitor of individuals. There was nothing too laborious, nor too humble, for me to undertake, the meanness of the business was raised by the dignity of the object." – Burke.

GENTLEMEN,

A DISSOLUTION OF PARLIAMENT being at hand, I again present myself to your notice, as seeking the honour, for the FOURTH time, of being your Representative. My public conduct has been before you for FIFTEEN YEARS, and consequently I feel that any assertion of principle is now needless. If I have done my duty in the high position to which you have called me, and if I have zealously followed to the best of my ability the example of Burke, which I adopted for imitation when I first took charge of your interests, my reward will be in the continuation of that confidence which it has been the anxious endeavour of my life to deserve, and which, connected as my family has been with your ancient City for Centuries past, forms a link, I am proud to maintain, between the living and the dead.

I have the honour to be,

GENTLEMEN,

Your faithful Servant,

F.H.F. BERKELEY

c) Mr McGeachy's Election Address

TO THE ELECTORS OF THE CITY OF BRISTOL

GENTLEMEN,

Having been invited by a Deputation representing, as I am led to believe, the political opinions of a large proportion of the Conservative Electors of Bristol, to become a Candidate for the Representation of your large and important City, whenever a dissolution of Parliament shall take place; and this invitation having been as unsolicited and unsought for by me as it was wholly unexpected, I have felt bound to accept, frankly and cordially, the high honour which has been spontaneously offered me. That honour will not be the less valued by me because, in representing your City, I shall represent the place of my Birth, the Home of my Childhood, and the Scene of a thousand early associations.

Of my peculiar fitness for the distinguished post now offered to me, it is not for me to judge, nor do I feel justified in allowing my own sense of my deficiencies, to lead me to decline the proffered honour, when those Gentlemen, who are in the best position to form a judgment, are of the opinion that it is in my power, by offering myself as a Candidate, to ensure the principles of Conservative progress upon which the future welfare of this great Empire, humanly speaking, may be considered to depend.

The principles upon which I am prepared to solicit your suffrage are shortly these: when the late Sir Robert Peel thought it his duty, in the face of an impending famine in Ireland, to abolish the laws restricting the importation of Foreign Corn, I felt myself bound, not without long consideration, and most sincere regret at the disruption of many sincere friendships and honourable party ties, to support that Statesman in the course which he adopted. I did so, believing that it would lead to my exclusion for a time from public life. It has done so; but during five years of retirement I have never regretted the step I took, and to the maintenance of those measures I conscientiously adhere.

To the measure introduced by the same Statesman, for the Permanent Endowment of the College of Maynooth, I also gave my support, because I deemed it, at the time, founded upon sound policy, and calculated, as a spontaneous act, to exercise an influence for good upon the minds of our Roman Catholic Fellow-subjects.

But the events of the last seven years, and especially the aggressive proceedings of the year 1850, have convinced me that that measure has failed to produce the effects which I had hoped would result from it; whilst the principles avowed and acted upon by the Roman Catholic Clergy and Laity, in reference to the ensuing election, are such as will cause many to doubt, whether the honest attempt made in 1829,<sup>1</sup> to place them on a footing of perfect civil equality with the rest of their Fellow-subjects, be not inconsistent with the maintenance of those Civil and Religious Liberties which our Protestant forefathers shed their blood to establish, and with those rights of conscience which I am prepared to make any sacrifice to uphold. Under these circumstances, I see no reason to persist in a policy which has failed; and I cannot better express my views than by using the words of a near and dear Relative of mine, in his Address to his Constituents: "I was willing, while the Roman Catholic body acted the part of good Subjects, that they should enjoy their share of National Revenues; now that they have allowed Foreign Intrigue to mix and tamper with their allegiance, I am for withholding from them the means which they have unfairly used; and I would take all care to guard the religion of this Protestant Country alike from their overt pretensions and their insidious influence".

In the great Colonial questions now forcing themselves on the attention of Statesmen, I have long taken a deep and an increasing interest; and I should endeavour to promote, to the utmost of my power, the extension of our Colonial trade. I shall give my best attention to every measure calculated to raise the Shipping Interest from its present state of depression, and to afford increased facilities of communication with our distant possessions.

To promote the improvement and extension of Education for all Classes of my Countrymen, I have devoted much time; and I trust that, by moderation and a charitable construction of motives, the difficulties attaching to that question may be overcome, – that the devotion of the Clergy to this branch of their duties may be duly recognised, and their fair influence maintained consistently with the free and unfettered action of the various branches of Protestant Dissenters.

As the Son of a Soldier, who spent his life, and sacrificed it in the service of his Country, I am not insensible to the importance of National Defence. I believe Peace is best secured by being fully prepared against Aggression; and by an improved administration of our Army, Navy and Ordnance, I am persuaded that without any great increased outlay, our means of defence may be almost indefinitely increased.

To the reform so greatly needed in the administration of the Law; to the progressive improvement of all our Institutions; to the throwing open to Talent and to Merit every Office in the State; to the encouragement of that Talent and that Merit beyond the limited circle of a few favoured families, I confidently look as widening the basis on which our national greatness depends, and it is because I trust that the policy of the present Government will be, in this respect, the exact reverse of that of their predecessors, because I believe they will open to all classes of their Countrymen the various departments of the Public Service, that I shall give a cordial support to the Earl of Derby's Administration. Of the Ballot, I say nothing, because you and I are Englishmen; and, in the earnest hope that if your efforts are crowned with success, you may find me as able, as I shall be willing, to promote the interests of your ancient City,

I have the Honour to remain your obedient and faithful Friend and Servant,

FOSTER ALLEYNE McGEACHY

d) Old Bristol's Refusal of Gore Langton

(Air: “Oh! Susannah!”)

You've cruelly deceived me in everything you've done,
 You've plotted against Freedom, whilst pledging with your tongue,
 You've given us grievous Taxes on pretence of care for Health,
 You've given a Ball with great Parade to gain some Votes by Stealth.

*But oh! Gore Langton! Do not cry for me,
 You never shall be Member for this old Ci-ty.*

We wanted a “New Hospital” open to Misery’s call,
 We asked you to a Meeting large, we held in the Guildhall,
 But No! You would not come, you would no money give,
 For the maimed and sick no votes can give, why should the poor man live.

So oh! Gore Langton! etc.

We'll have a Man of Honesty, of good Heart and good Head,
 Who'll give the Poor protection, nor keep them out of Bread,
 Who'll listen to petitioners, nor turn away his ear,
 From any wanting help from him, let him be rich or poor.

*So you! Gore Langton! Need not cry for me!
 As you never shall be chosen by this old Ci-ty!*

I wish the Queen to visit me, but then I must provide
A lady to receive her, who'll not disgrace her side,
But I must wait another year before I can invite her,
And then I trust that she may come, and no affront betide her.

*Then oh! Gore Langton! pray retire from me!
Whilst you're Mayor I can't invite the Queen to this old Ci-ty!*

e) Free Trade and the Big Loaf

Electors of Bristol be not led astray
By the crafty yet popular cry of the day,
The cry of "No Popery" TORIES would spread,
But you cry Free Trade and a large Loaf of Bread.

I'm opposed to the Pope and the grant to Maynooth,
I'm opposed to all fraud and a friend to the truth,
But the poor man who works with his hands or his head,
Must contend for Free Trade and a large Loaf of Bread.

To your guns, brave Electors, nor principle yield,
The champions of Liberty are in the field;
Vote for Langton and Berkeley without any dread,
They are friends of Free Trade and a large Loaf of Bread.

The Tories we know them, we've tried them and find,
That to take off our burdens they never felt inclined,
Vote for Langton and Berkeley whatever may be said,
And secure you Free Trade and a large Loaf of Bread.

In conclusion some counsel I'm anxious to give,
Abstain from all evil and peaceably live,
That Being by whom you are constantly fed,
Designs you Free Trade and a large Loaf of Bread.

APPENDIX 4. NOTABLE VOTERS

Included here are all Aldermen and Councillors whether (at the date of the election) past, present or future; public officials and officers of the Merchant Venturers', Colston's and similar societies holding office at the date of the election; prominent industrialists, financiers, builders and developers, business and professional men and clergy; and a number of other worthies whose names would have appeared in any Who's Who of Bristol in 1852. Also included are a number of rising men such as John Cordeux, then a linen draper but later the founder of the eponymous Clifton department store. Although such men may not have influenced many votes in 1852, it seemed perverse to leave them out of a survey of notable men who voted.

Members of the Bristol Corporation before 1835 are shown as "Tory" or "Whig"; members of the Town Council after that date as "Conservative" or "Liberal". These uses are explained in the note at the start of the Introduction.

Except where reference is made to the 1851 Census or Mathews' Bristol Directory for 1852, information about members of the Corporation and/or Council and other office holders has been culled from the Rev. A.B. Beaven, Bristol Lists: Municipal and Miscellaneous (Bristol, 1899) and/or Appendices 4 and 5 to Graham Bush, Bristol and its Municipal Government 1801–1851, BRS 29 (Bristol, 1976). As to the clergy, use has been made of Alan Munden's edition of the 1851 Religious Census of Bristol and Gloucestershire (Bristol & Gloucestershire Archaeological Society, Gloucestershire Record Series 2015, Bristol). Other works giving information about the notables have been footnoted. As with the notes to the Introduction, online sources have only been footnoted in the absence of an equivalent printed source.

Entries showing religious denomination among laymen ("High Churchman", "Baptist", "Independent", etc.) indicate a known level of commitment beyond formal Sunday worship.

Abbott, Henry. C, St Werburgh. (c1791–1874). Solicitor. Alderman (C), 1854–74.

Adams, Francis. C, St Nicholas. (c1806–80). Provision merchant. Alderman (C), 1857–80, Mayor 1867–9. JP 1868.

Names known or presumed to denote Jewish origin (spellings as in Poll Book): Abraham, Alman, Benjamin, Blankensee, Cohen, Emdin, Hutzstein, Jacobs, Levi, Levin, Levy, Meyer, Michael, Miles (Benjamin), Moseley, Nyman, Platnauer, Rothchild, Solman, Solomon, Solomon, Wolfson (Meyer).

Recourse has been had to the surname database mentioned above, to the details of the Bristol Jewish Congregation to be found at www.jewishgen.org/jcr-uk/Community/bri1/ and to Judith Samuel, Jews in Bristol (Bristol, 1997). Difficulties arise from the widespread use of Old Testament Christian names among non-Jews. In cases of doubt, surnames have thus carried more weight than first names, although John Abraham (C, St James) has not been counted as a likely Jew; his occupation is given as "Pork butcher".

INDEX

PB in the index indicates the page in the text of the Poll Book on which a voter's name appears.

Names of voters underlined in the text of the Poll Book indicate a biographical note in Appendix 4. Voters appearing in the Introduction and Appendix 4 are included in this index, as are the names of people other than voters mentioned in Appendix 4. Voters whose names appear only in the Poll Book and not in the Introduction or Appendix 4 are not indexed here.
